12/10/2017 - GWANGJU AIR BASE, South Korea — Over the last week, U.S. and Republic of Korean Forces across South Korea participated in an annual bilateral exercise, Vigilant Ace-18. The exercise focuses on interoperability within the alliance between the United States Air Force and ROK Air Force.

Although this is an annual exercise, two major differences this year were the participation of fifth-generation aircraft and the standing up of Gwangju Air Base. Despite the fifth-generation fighters being new to the ROKAF, and the challenges of creating a fully functional collocated operating base, the exercise still went off without a hitch.

"We have learned a lot of the limitations that are here currently and how to work around them, said Maj. Joshua Ramirez, director of inspections, 18th Wing, Kadena Air Base. "Obviously we don't have all of the comforts of home herethat includes equipment and personnel, we found very creative ways to get around that stuff and still get jets in the air."

With U.S. military units from all over coming together as one team, including Alaska, Japan and the Republic of Korea, Vigilant Ace-18 allows the USAF to employ the agility of airpower away from home stations as well as an opportunity to get to know our ROKAF counterpart's capabilities.

"In order for us to really be able to project the force that we need, we really have to come together and learn how to work together and understand what each base brings to the fight," Ramirez said. "It gets them to see how we do things and it gets us to see how they would do things and find a common ground to make it a unified front."

While the exercise has a heavy emphasis on air power and deterrence, it's also about building relationships.

"Specifically with our ROKAF partners, it allows us to continue to strengthen and build the alliance which ultimately is the key to deterrence and keeping the peace on the peninsula," explained Brig. Gen. Case Cunningham, commander, 18th Wing, Kadena Air Base. "That opportunity is incredibly important for us." Maximizing interoperability and partnership, was tested first-hand when a snowstorm resulted in aircraft unexpectedly landing at Gwangju Air Base.

"For this skeleton crew that we havecompared to what we have back hometo be able to catch all those personnel would have been impossible," Ramirez said. "The ROKAF stepped up like champions and they were out there catching READ VIGILANT ACE-18 PAGE2 ur society often has a preoccupation of raising up people to mythical levels. We equate various groups of people with elevated morals, increased intelligence and a naïve belief that those people are infallible from bad decisions.

Look no further than the public condemnation of your favorite actor or athlete when a personal struggle or a criminal offense is made public. Over the last generation, Americans have put our service members into that category. They are labeled as the "best of America," millions of people have some form of "support our troops" paraphernalia and we are treated to television shows and movies dedicated to military virtues.

Our society has tried to turn every man or woman who joins a branch of the Armed Forces as superheroes who magically only make the perfect, and perfectly courageous, decisions required of them.

Our society has arguments about whether the actions of some honor or offend our troops, often without stopping to ask our troops what they think. They have become a monolith to be used to further a cause, whether political, charitable or business. The American people have turned well over a million men and women into a faceless group that is exploited for their service.

What those people are missing is the phenomenal nature of our individual service members. They are not faceless, nor a monolith nor a bloc of people who believe one thing. They are men and women, they are every ethnicity and creed who live in America, they are Republicans and Democrats, only out of uniform, of course, they are Christians, Muslims, Jews, atheists and so much more.

They are single and they are married. Some have babies, some have "fur babies" and others have neither. Our service members, the men and women of every military branch, represent our entire country in all its glory.

It's easy to forget the United States is rare among the world as there is no ethnic group of "Americans." We have gained our strength through our diversity. It's not a mistake that America has grown stronger the more inclusive we have become.

I have been given the opportunity to serve in a deployed environment. I serve with Soldiers, Sailors, Marines and Airmen. I serve with Special Forces members and conventional forces members. Together, we are working hard to enable the fight against terrorists and extremists where they are, rather than at home.

Working here has really made clear what eight years as an Air Force civilian already taught me: our men and women in uniform are regular people. Some joined for honor and a patriotic duty. Some joined for education. Others joined because they had no other prospects and the military offered three meals and a paycheck. Some even joined because a judge gave them the option of prison or service, but they all serve. They are not free from errors in judgement or terrible decisions. Those on Okinawa have seen that all too well. They are inherently fallible because they are merely human.

That, however, is their strength. The military is a collection of "regular people" who pull together to form something greater. They work toward a common purpose with a shared bond born of service, sacrifice and a decision to join something bigger than themselves.

Whether they are Special Forces on the front lines, transportation specialists, maintainers, pilots or submariners, they are working to create a world better than they found it. Some will see combat their entire careers and others will never be within hundreds of miles of enemy soldiers, but they all build a military that is the most powerful and effective fighting force in the history of the world.

Our service members are not faceless. They are not clones or carbon copies to fill a billet. Though their uniforms suggest blending into one, their stories and the backgrounds have created unique individuals who put on those uniforms.

This holiday season, when people say they are thankful for our troops, please take the extra minute to recognize the men and women behind those uniforms. They are the reason we live in the land of the free.

planes, helping us make sure everybody was safe on the ground so there were no accidents or incidents with the aircraft."

Experiences like this re-emphasize the importance of continuously training with our counterparts.

"I believe there's always something to learn – how to be good teammates and partners – but also how to be prepared if called upon to hit the ground running," said Chief Master Sgt. Michael Ditore, command chief, 18th Wing.

Building bonds amongst the participants can foster a sense of trust between the different units involved.

"It's always about relationships; we're going to continue to develop and build those relationships so that when it does come time – if needed – to work together, we're not strangers," Ditore said. "It gives them both the confidence and trust in us to show what true professionals we are, that we're here for them for the long run."

Trust is equally important in the operational aspect of the exercise. With so many players involved, one has to be able to count on the person working along side them for a successful mission to be pulled off.

"I think we performed outstanding; we did great," Ramirez said. "Bumps and bruises along the way, but overall we learned a lot, we overcame and we did what we were supposed to do. It was great to have everybody do their part and see what they can learn from this exercise."

CATM training helps qualify Airmen in weapons proficiency

By Airman 1st Class Greg Erwin

18th Wing Public Affairs

12/7/2017 — Training for the right moment is paramount to maintaining our position as the world's greatest Air Force. On this day, like any other in Okinawa, a distinct sound can be heard after walking through the door at Combat Arms.

"FIRE!" Moments later, loud bangs from rifles ring out, sending sound waves through the student's bodies, the heart skips a beat and the only thing one can hear is the ringing in their ears from the pulled triggers. Welcome to combat arms qualification training.

The schedule for students attending the course was packed and started at 8:00 a.m. After arriving, the class meets their instructor for the day and proceeds to the armory to acquire their weapons. Training began with two to three hours of classroom instruction where students learned how to clear, load, unload, use and clean their weapon.

Once the initial classroom portion is completed, the students head to lunch, and return ready to start firing qualifications.

Air Force personnel primarily qualify on the M4 carbine and the M9 pistol. However, the range here at Kadena can also support the M870 shotgun, M240 and M249 machine guns, M107 sniper rifle, as well as the M203 grenade launcher.

"The course is necessary for Airmen who are about to change stations, forward deploy, or for duty requirements," said Staff Sgt. Seanice Thomas, 18th Security Forces Squadron combat arms range safety officer.

"You have to have a need to come through the training, it's not open to the public."

Range qualification testing consists of multiple magazines with different numbers of bullets loaded for different scenarios and firing positions. This format helps simulate random situations that Airmen may encounter on the job or while deployed.

The qualification portion takes anywhere from three to four hours. This is the most crucial portion to determine proficiency of the Airmen.

According to Staff Sgt. Sebastian Landivar, 18th SFS combat arms range safety officer, the stress of making sure your effort is good enough to qualify can weigh on the mind of many who take the course.

"A lot of folks are kind of scared, afraid of weapons, or don't enjoy it," Landivar said. "If you come in with a positive attitude, you're able to make this day a lot better."

By the end of the day however, the students really enjoyed the experience. "My favorite part of the training was shooting on burst mode," Staff Sgt. Tess Sunderlin, 353rd Special Operations Support Squadron aircrew flight equipment said. "You have to really focus to hit the target, and the adrenaline rush is really cool."

Sunderlin also had words of encouragement for anyone who is scheduled to test.

"The line instructors are really helpful, they know what they're doing, and I trust them," Sunderlin said.

For Airmen who are still not convinced why the training is important, or maybe aren't taking the day as serious as they'd like, Sunderlin also had this to say.

"Take the training seriously, because you never know when you're going to have to forward deploy with somebody and use these skills," Sunderlin said. "Pay attention, do your best, and don't treat it as just a day off from work."

The skills taught in the class are just another way that the 18th SFS combat arms section is able to help keep Team Kadena safe, and ultimately help the Air Force in producing the most capable, ready, and highly skilled Airmen able to fly, fight, and win.

12/7/2017 — When two buses filled with chief master sergeants and the vice commander visit a unit, it is either a very good or a very bad thing. Fortunately for the senior master sergeants they met, they brought positive news.

A total of 11 Kadena senior master sergeants were selected for promotion to chief master sergeant. All available chiefs and Col. Richard Tanner, 18th Wing vice commander, visited each of the selectees at their units to congratulate them Dec. 12.

'Touring the base and meeting all of the new chiefs brought back memories," said Chief Master Sgt. Greg Butcher, 18th Force Support Squadron military personnel flight superintendent. "I remember that excitement and it was truly humbling to have been a part of it."

The excitement of joining the top of the U.S. Air Force enlisted corps wasn't lost on the selectees. Families, coworkers, leaders and more joined together to congratulate the new chiefs on their promotion, which led to tears and heartfelt thanks.

"Making chief feels unbelievable," said Senior Master Sgt. Demetrius Jones, 18th Communications Squadron operations flight superintendent. "It's very humbling and as much as you want to prepare yourself, you can't. I can't forget the people that have helped get me where I am throughout the years. For now, though, I'm excited to continue doing my job and doing the best I can wherever the Air Force ends up needing me."

Team Kadena conducts combined NEO and RPU exercise

By Senior Airman Omari Bernard

18th Wing Public Affairs 12/7/2017 — Airmen from the 18th Wing simulated accepting personnel and evacuees through a base-wide combined deployment and evacuation exercise Dec. 4 here.

"Today we are exercising our ability to operate two key components to ensure our readiness in the Pacific," said Maj. Sean Parker, 18th Logistics Readiness Squadron director of operations. "We are looking at our ability to receive noncombatant evacuation operation (NEO) evacuees from locations in the Pacific other than Okinawa and we are also looking at our ability to receive and support contingency operations here."

In a real-world operation, Kadena Air Base becomes one of many hubs for forward deployed Airmen and NEO evacuees from all over the Pacific Air Force's area of responsibility.

According to Parker, exercising Team Kadena's ability to receive forces while simultaneously taking care of evacuees can be difficult.

"Testing reception is challenging, it involves a number of different processing centers and bed down locations," Parker explained. "They are very different processes and exercising them both at the same time stresses our ability to command and control the events at the same time."

Over a period of two days hundreds of Airmen, roleplaying as deployed forces and evacuees, were able to in-process to the base as deployed forces while evacuees were taken care of and simulated transported safely back to the U.S. By exercising these reception operations at the same time Team Kadena tested their skill sets and identified best practices for planning future contingency operations.

During the exercise Team Kadena members in-processed to the base, as augmentees, through the reception processing unit at the Schilling Community Center while Airmen, role playing as civilian evacuees, in processed at the reception control center at the Risner Fitness Center.

"Processing through NEO was easy and awesome to follow," said Senior Airman Ashley White, 18th Civil Engineer Squadron NEO evacuee. "Everything was smooth and I felt I received the attention that I needed. They talked to me like a dependent and were very comforting and welcoming, I couldn't ask for any more than that."

White said she feels comfort in knowing her husband will be taken care of if he ever has to go through a NEO.

"I feel very confident in going home and being able to explain this to my husband about what he needs to do, what he needs

12/8/2017 — Loud yells and heavy thumps echoed through the McCutcheon Gym at Marine Corps Air Station Futenma Dec. 7, as U.S. service members practiced Level-1 Army combative techniques with the Japan Ground Self-Defense Force.

The bilateral hand-to-hand combat training included members of the Army, Air Force and JGSDF.

"This week we went over the basic combative course level one," said U.S. Army Staff Sgt. Julius Dunsan 1-1 Air Defense Artillery primary combatives instructor. "This is a five-day course where students can gain basic knowledge on how to defeat their opponent in the open field using hand-to-hand combat."

According to Dunsan, the lessons learned during the week can be used by anyone to become a better combat fighter.

"It teaches important lessons like engaging the enemy, closing the distance, getting the dominant body position and finishing the fight," Dunsan explained. "This is a great training opportunity. If you find yourself in close quarters combat, this training will let you know what to do to secure victory and your life."

According to JGSDF Sgt. Makoto Shiraishi, 15th Anti-Aircraft Artillery Regiment combatives instructor, the JGSDF has its own set of combatives, but focus less on ground maneuvers.

"This is a very good opportunity as instructors to teach what we've learned this week to our soldiers so we can gain

U.S. Air Force Staff Sgt. Colby Davis, 18th Medical Support Squadron pharmacy vault custodian, enjoyed the combatives course.

"Today I'm helping out with the Army basic combatives course as a translator and participant," Davis said. "It's great to work out with our sister services and partner nations and I'm grateful for the opportunity to learn a new set of skills that I don't get to see at my normal everyday job."

Building bundles, checking them twice

By Staff Sgt. David Owsianka

374th Airlift Wing Public Affairs 12/7/2017 — Once a year islanders throughout the Commonwealth of the Northern Marianas, Federated States of Micronesia, and Republic of Palau will see bundles parachute out the back of multiple planes to provide them with essential supplies that are necessary for their daily lives. The bundles include items such as educational material, clothing and food, but before delivery, there is a team of dedicated professionals making sure they are built safely and up to standard.

Airmen from Yokota's 374th Logistics Readiness Squadron combat mobility flight and the 353rd Special Operations Group, Kadena Air Base, started building 10 practice bundles and 140 supply bundles for the 66th Operation Christmas Drop at Anderson Air Force Base, Guam, Dec. 7. The bundles are prepared to be dropped out of multiple C-130J Super Hercules and C-130H Hercules from the U.S. Air Force, Royal Australian Air Force and Koku Jieitai (Japan Air Self-Defense Force) to the 56 different islands over the next ten days.

"It's feels great and is really nice to know that the supplies that we are putting into the bundles are truly going to those in need," said Senior Airman

John Marcum, 374th LRS CMF rigger. "There is a lot of training that goes into everything, so once we learn how to do everything it all builds up to this and being a veteran (third year at OCD) it's really nice to show others how to accomplish our tasks more efficiently."

The group began the bundle building process by cutting the wood into the proper size and length, then set up the boxes so the bundles could be ready to be airdropped. The final step in the build, is securing the parachutes so that the bundles can be safely delivered to the islands.

Members from the 353rd SOG joined the LRS team to provide experience they gained from being stationed at Andersen and performing these tasks for previous OCD events to help make the training event more successful.

"With Christmas Drop being as big as it's important for us to train with and learn from Yokota Airmen as we perform costal humanitarian airlift drops to help us become more proficient at it to provide our coworkers with these methods as a new capability for us to possibly use it in the future," Master Sgt. "Doing this is really exciting because a lot of what we do at our home station is just training, so when we get to come down here and apply those skills is super fulfilling because we can see the joy of the islanders as they receive their bundles," Senior Airman Cassandra Cobb, 374th LRS CMF rigger.

Teaching the giving spirit

By Margaret Bartlow

Stearley Heights Elementary School 5th Grade Ms. Rice's Class

12/12/2017 — This year the second-annual toy drive was organized by Stearley Heights and Kadena Elementary Schools. It was planned by Kadena Elementary's counselor, Ms. Beard-Archie, and Stearley Heights Elementary's counselor, Mr. Wirsich. The donations will go to the Okinawa Children's Hospital and to Okinawa City Social Welfare. Children, especially during the season of giving, should be able to know and show the true meaning of selflessness. So as the exciting holiday of Christmas approaches, kids are given the opportunity to donate to the less fortunate. This will not just teach the true meaning of selflessness and boost the giving spirit inside all of us, but also make someone out there a whole lot happier. These two schools are teaching the giving spirit.

The guidelines were as follows: Donations will be accepted from Monday, December 4, to Thursday, December 14. Toys will be given to children within the age range of 1-13. It was asked that the toys be inexpensive (ex. under ten dollars), and that they were put in the box unwrapped, but in their original packaging. The class that donates the most toys will receive a prize.

It is known among all of us that we should give Christmas spirit and gifts to the less fortunate.

Stearley Heights Elementary participants made the comments below when asked the question "What do you think about the toy drive?" One student replied "I think it is a good idea to give new toys to kids who can't afford them." Two others replied "I feel really good about donating to kids and want the school to continue fundraisers like this." and "I think it's a very good idea to help kids who don't have many things, and besides, it's the season of giving!" A teacher responded "The toy drive is an excellent way for our school to come together and bring hope and joy to kids in need." A few other exquisite answers were given by several other students.

The toy drive will bring happiness, joy, hope, and Christmas spirit to so many people this Christmas. It will also bring the true meaning of both Christmas and selflessness to so many students, along with a gift of an even more generous heart for every student this joyful holiday. We would like for every student that gives and every child that receives to share in these benefits this happy season. Christmas is for everyone, and we should try to make sure everybody will feel the Christmas spirit this year. It will never hurt for anyone to make at least a small donation at any good organization. We are trying to, and hopefully succeeding, teach students this. That again brings in the word selflessness. Give as well as receive. And now, I'd like to wish everyone a very merry Christmas. I hope that everybody this Christmas will have something, anything, that will bring joy to them. We are trying to make this possible. Three cheers to everyone else that is trying also. Any act of kindness, however small, is never wasted. Toy drives, food drives, all of them are helping to make a very merry Christmas. That, and to teach selflessness to students, are the goals of our efforts.

Kadena Air Base Community Notes

To submit an announcement for the base bulletin, please visit www.kadena.af.mil NO FEDERAL ENDORSEMENT OF PRIVATE ORGANIZATIONS OR ACTIVITIES IS INTENDED.

Trash & Recycling Important Information

18th CONS and 18 CEG continue to work diligently to ensure our communities receive reliable trash collection services. Even though we've been able to resume limited waste collection service, our waste collection emergency is not over. We need your help to maximize recycling to reduce our garbage. Up to 50% of our trash is recyclable. A helpful list of recyclable items can be found at KAB Facebook. Bulk trash services have been temporarily interrupted, so DO NOT leave large items on the side of the road. Large refuse can be brought to several locations off base for disposal. For questions or concerns, please call CE Customer Service at 634-2424.

Kadena and Camp Foster Emergency Numbers

Kadena Fire Emergency Services reminds everyone to program their cell phones with the emergency numbers. To report an emergency on Kadena via cell, dial 098-934-5911, and from an office phone, dial 911. For Camp Foster via cell, dial 098-911-1911, or from an office phone, dial 911.

AADD: Get Home Safe

Did you drink tonight? Made a plan but it's falling through? Can't catch a cab? If any of this applies to you, call AADD. Don't risk it all, when you can get a ride home for free. Call AADD at the cell phone number 098-961-1110 and then ask for the USO or dial DSN: 634-3889 We're open from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. and we're here to help.

How to File a Complaint with IG

If you believe you are unable to resolve your complaint through supervisory channels, you may seek IG assistance to determine if the complaint should be filed with the IG. You can file a complaint if you reasonably believe inappropriate conduct has occurred or a violation of law, policy, procedures, or regulation has been committed. Complete the personnel data information on an AF Form 102 and briefly outline the facts and relevant information related to the issue or complaint. List the allegations of wrongdoing briefly, in general terms and provide supporting narrative detail and documents later, when interviewed by an IG person. Allegations should be written as bullets and should answer who committed the violation; what violation was committed; what law, regulation, procedures, or policy was violated; when did the violation occur. Help is available: Call your Kadena IG office at 634-7622 for Maj. Sarabia or 634-1109 for Mr. Lovingood, or leave a message on the Kadena Fraud Waste & Abuse (FWA) Hotline at 634-0404.

18th MDG Clinic Closures

The Kadena Air Base clinic will be closed on the following dates this year: Dec 25 (Christmas Day) Closed All Day / Dec 26 (5th AF Family Day) Closed All Day / The 18th Medical Group is responsible for ensuring the 18th Wing's medical readiness in support of the United States' and Japan's mutual interests. In keeping with this mission, the Kadena Clinic will be participating in 18th Wing upcoming exercises. During exercises, our normal patient care and clinical services (pharmacy, lab, immunizations, etc.) will be impacted, as the clinic will be closed for one day during these exercises (exact dates subject to scenario). We ask for your patience as our trusted professionals exercise their skills and work with the Wing and other agencies on island in support of these training events. We apologize for any inconvenience that this may cause. As always, in the event of an emergency, seek emergency services at the U.S. Naval Hospital on Camp Foster, or by dialing ambulance services at 634-1796 or by cell phone 098-934-5911. For more information, contact Capt. Jennifer Stark at 630-4565, Staff Sgt. Larissa Palmer at 630-4504, or Ms. Melissa Cook at 630-5050.

SHISA, OKINAWA'S GUARDIANS ON THE ROOFTOPS

Shisa, the "legendary beast" placed on the rooftops and entrances of Okinawan houses, watches over and protects us.

The word "Shisa" is said to have originated from the word "Simha," which means "lion" in the Sanskrit language.

The scary looking faces of the Shisa may seem ironic as they are placed on the rooftops and entrances as talismans against evil.

It seems to represent the expansive atmosphere of the southern tropical island of Okinawa.

You may probably notice that most of the Shisa are in an "a-un" pair, one on the left and HAI-SAI! (Hello) Chanpru is Okinawan for "something mixed" and the word also is used when talking about the mixture of cultures. In this corner, we will go over some fun tips as you enjoy your stay on the island.

vol.40 Winter Solstice in JAPAN

Winter Solstice or "TOUJI" is the day to mark the shortest day and the longest night of the year. There is a custom of eating KABOCHA (Japanese pumpkin) on TOUJI to help ward off catching a cold due to its rich nutrients. There is also another custom of taking a bath with whole YUZU (Japanese citron). It is said that the YUZU fruit has warming properties to prevent you

A long time ago, it is said that the Shisa was enshrined at the entrance and hilltops of villages. But since the last century or so, the Shisa began to get placed on top of the roofs of civilian homes.

This became popular when red roof tiles were made open to the public without any restrictions. It is said that these Shisa statues were first made by craftsmen who used the remains of red roof tiles. the other on the right.

The Shisa with an open mouth is male, and the one whose mouth is closed is female. The term "a-un" also comes from the Sanskrit language.

The term is supposed to represent the first and last letters of the alphabet, meaning the beginning and end of things.

There are a variety of small porcelain Shisas that are sold as souvenirs.

You will definitely find one you will like.

from catching a cold and the fragrance has relaxing properties that will help you sleep through the long winter nights.
